Assessment methodology

ExxonMobil supports policies that support the energy industry.

We represent our shareholders, employees, customers, and communities in public policy. Our principles are consistent with our efforts to help solve the "and" equation – meeting global demand for energy products and helping society reduce greenhouse gas emissions. We share our policy positions clearly through various channels, guiding our lobbying efforts. Explore our report to learn about our main lobbying priorities.

Key takeaways

- Corporations and interest groups spent $5 billion in 2023 on lobbying. ExxonMobil's total spend represents less than one quarter of 1% of that amount.
- ExxonMobil exceeds transparency requirements, providing details on our federal and state lobbying expenditures, political giving and trade association memberships.
- ExxonMobil advocates for a variety of emissions reductions policies including support for carbon capture and storage (CCS) and hydrogen, methane regulations, carbon intensity-based fuel standards, and more.
- In 2023, we assessed 65 organizations, including 10 new ones, for alignment on emissions reductions and energy security policies. We found 3 organizations partially misaligned – and one misaligned.

Driving a lower-emission future

Experts agree that certain lower-emission technologies are crucial – even under a multitude of transition pathways – including carbon capture and storage, hydrogen, electrification, and lower-emission fuels, among others. ExxonMobil supports policies that promote and regulate these technologies.

ExxonMobil's advocacy for carbon capture and storage policies

ExxonMobil strongly supports policies that advance the research, development, and deployment of carbon capture and storage (CCS) technologies and advocates for policies that encourage the use of CCS.

ExxonMobil's advocacy for advanced recycling in Europe

ExxonMobil supports advanced recycling, often called chemical recycling, as a vital solution alongside traditional recycling methods.

ExxonMobil's advocacy efforts

The Inflation Reduction Act (IRA) introduced new climate-related policies in the U.S. that aim to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by seeking to incentivize a lower-carbon economy.
